THE STORY OF THE SHUNAMITE* Is one of the most touching in Scripture, and as our friends show signs of liking to dwell on these pure By her neighbors, Madame G. was regarded sources of poetry—showing therein a strong sympa- as a being of mystery, and many a vague surmise, learned unconsciously to yourself, to love! But the with our own feelings, now as well as earlier-we, and many an unfounded rumor had gone the give the nicture as it was coloured to our imagination, rounds of the dense little neighborhood to which and transferred to verse.

It was a sultry day of summer time. The sun pourd down upon the ripen'd grain With quivering heat, and the suspended leaves Hung motionless. The cattle on the hills Stood still, and the divided flock were all Laying their nostrils to the cooling roots, And the sky looked like silver, and it seem'd As if the air had fainted, and the pulse f nature had run down, and ceased to beat. "Haste thee, my child!" the Syrian mother said,
"Thy father is athirst"—and from the depths Of the cool well under the leaning tree, She drew refreshing water, and with thoughts Of God's sweet goodness stirring at her heart, She bless'd her beautiful boy, and to his way Committed him. And he went lightly on With his soft hands press'd closely to the cool Stone vessel, and his little naked feet Lifted with watchful care, and o'er the hills And thro' the light green hollows, where the lambs Go for the tender grass, he kept his way— Wiling its distance with his simple thoughts— Till, in the wilderness of sheaves, with brows Throbbing with heat, he sat his burthen down.

Childhood is restless ever, and the boy Stayed not within the shadow of the tree; But with a joyous industry went forth Into the reapers' places, and bound up His tiny sheaves, and plaited cunningly The pliant withs out of the shining straw, Cheering their labor on till they forgot The heat and weariness of stooping toil In the endear'd beguiling of his mirth. Presently he was silent, and his eye Closed as with a dizzy pain, and with his hand Press'd hard upon his forehead, and his breast Heaving with the suppression of a cry, He attered a faint murmur, and fell back Upon the loosen'd sheaf, insensible.

They bore him to his mother, and he lay Upon her knees till noon; and then he died! She had watched every breath, and kept her hand Soft on his forchead, and gazed in upon The dreamy langour of his listless eye; And she had laid back all his suncy curls, And kiss'd his delicate lip, and lifted him Into her bosom, till her heart grew strong-His beauty was so unlike death! She leaned Over him now, that she might catch the low Sweet music of his breath, that she had learned To love when he was slu nbering at her side In his unconscious infancy—"So still! I'is a soft sleep! How beautiful he lies, With his fair forehead, and the rosy veins Playing so treshly in his sunny check! How could they say that he would die! Oh God! could not lose him! I have treasured all His childhood in my heart, and even now, As he has slept, my memory has been there, Counting like treasures all his winning ways-His unforgotten sweetness.—Yet so still! How like this breathless slumber is to death! could believe that in that bosom now There was no pulse—it beats so languidly! cannot see it stir; but his red lip!-Death would not be so very beautiful! And that half smile—would death have left that there And should I not have felt that he would die?-And have I not wept over him!-and praved Morning and night for him?—and could he die? No-God will keep him! He will be my pride Many long years to come, and this fair hair Will darken like his father's, and his eye Be of a deeper blue when he is grown; And he will be so tall and I shall look With such a pride upon him! He to die!" And the fond mother lifted his soft curls, And smiled, as if twere mockery to think That such fair things could perish .- Suddenly Her hand shrunk from him, and the color fled From her fix'd lip, and her supporting knees Were shook beneath her child! Her hand had touch Ilis forehead, as she dallied with his bair-And it was cold—like clay! Slow, very slow, Came the misgiving that her child was dead. She sat a moment, and her eyes were closed In a dumb prayer for strength, and then she took His little hand and press'd it earnestly-And put her lips to his—and look'd ugain Fearfully on him—and then, bending low, She whisper'd in his ear, "My son! - My son!" And as the ocho died, and not a sound Broke on the stillness, and he lay there, still, Motionless on her knee—the truth would come And with a sharp, quick cry, as if her heart Word crush'd, she lifted him and held him close Into her bosom—with a mother's thought—

The man of God came forth, and led the child Unto his mother and went on his way. And he was there—her beautiful—her own— Living and smiling on her-with his arms Folded about her neck, and his warm breath Breathing upon her ups, and ur us.

The music of his gentle voice once more.

On the evening of the day on which the body of the deceased had been carried to its last home, two persons were seated before the old fire-place which gave warmth to the chief apartment. They were a young female, and the stranger above mentioned.

After a long pause-during which they had sat, watching the flickering embers, busied in thought—the young man spoke—

[From the Manchester Memorial.] THE DEVIL'S DEN, IN CHESTER.

Messas. Epirons: You have probably heard appertaining to the history of New England .-And if you have never visited the cave, and have pearance, from the descriptions heretofore published, be assured they are most erroneous. I believe that there are very few persons who have visited the Devil's Den who can give any description of it farther than the appearance of its month.

A few days ago, in company with some friends I visited the den on purpose to see what it contained. I will give as correct an account of it as my feeble powers of description will allow me to do. The scenery about the month of the cave is delightful at this season of the year. The waters of the broad Massebesick wash the pebbles at the fact of the full just below the envery. Looking over this beautiful sheet of water, you may see a pleasant gradation of distances, terminated by the pale blue of the Uncamue's Mountains in Goffstown. Turning about, a beautiful contrast is presented in the abruptness of the wood-covconscious of the superiority of its location. The entrance to the cave is about one-third the way up the hill, and presents the appearance of an arched gateway, and is about five feet in height. The Messenger* not flying out on our approach, we bannished our pitpattings, happy to learn His Majesty was not at home. While striking a light one of my companions (who was bending over me, gazing into the dark gloom of the cave.) expressed his conviction that he could clearly distinguish the odor of brimstone. Now this, to the rest of the company, did not appear very surpri-which I held in my hand, was burning within a foot of, and immediately under his olfactory receiver. This caused an explosion of merriment which made the old hill ring again, and set us in cheerful trim to begin our search for wonders .-A portion of the ledge extends apwards into the mouth of the cave about three and a half feet, leaving a foot and a half of space through which I crept, followed by one of my companions -After proceeding about four feet we found a fissure twenty inches wide in which we stood erect, lleaving three or four feet of space above us.— The fissure runs about parallel with a line drawn

The sides rent, (for such many a mark within was not long before she saw her husband approved it to be.) are covered with a thick, dirty pronching. He appeared much disturbed, and proved it to be,) are covered with a thick, dirty slime, a fact which together with the difficulty of access, induces me to believe, what I before stated, that very few of the visitors at this place go away wiser for their pains. The passage ascends regiarly with an occasional break, from the mouth to its termination,-We had proceeded upwards of seventy feet into the hill, when, as I was holding the light before me, groping slowly along, I was suddenly startled by the appearance of two balls of fire, 3 or 4 inches apart, and about six feet from me. The air was very damp and caused the light to burn dimly, so that I could see nothing clearly two feet from me. I held the light back and gazed steadily a lew moments, when the form of a head began to grow visible. It appeared like the head of a large animal crouched upon the fore paws. ready for a spring. I am not naturally easily alarmed, nor do I boast of possessing courage sufficient to feel perfectly easy in the den of a wild beast, and almost within its very grasp. From the examination I had taken of the object. I felt convinced it was an unimal, and most probably one that would prove a hard match to contend with alone in that narrow passage, for it was only wide enough for one at a time, and my companion could therefore be of no service to me. He observed my waiting, and asked why I did not proceed; not wishing to alarm him I answered that we were at the end of the case, and no passage out and opened my knife, which was a small one, expecting momentarily to have to use it. We were, however, fortunate enough to escape an atremotest part (into which we could crowd ourselves) to the mouth was twenty-two feet. There is no place within it where a person can stand, upright and not be within six inches of the ledge upon the sides. So much for the marvellous stories about the square rooms. It is nothing else than a seam in the ledge which has been separa-12d by some convulsion of nature; how, we may not know. It is not improbable that it may have been caused by an explosion of combustible mat ter, for unquestionably the earth in the cave is highly impregnated with saltpetre, and there is a sort of stone about the hill, which, when placed upon the fire, will burn blue for some minutes with the sulphur it contains. By climbing up about ten feet over the ledge, we found rather curious passage which I will describe. It commences twenty-seven feet from the end of the cave and extends about that distance by a steep ascent towards the top of the hill, which it must have very nearly reached. I saw evidence of this, by the small twigs of pine, and leaves, which had rattled down between the crevices above, and by the freshness and draught of the nir.

The beauty of the scenery in the vicinity, atoned amply for the 'disappointment I felt about the wonderous cave, as it has doubtless done for many others.
